An open letter to USC's new president

Dear Dr. Holderman,

Your selection could auger well for the University, at least when you are set in relief against the sorry parade of politicos and military generals the Board of Trustees tried to snare. You do have an academic background and you've been associated with a state university of some minimal calibre. It is yet within the realm of possibility that you entertain hopes of building a university of academic excellence. Only time will tell whether you were chosen because you demonstrably fit the Board of Trustees' standards of mediocrity and rightwing political conformity, or whether, by feckless happenstance, the Board unwittingly chose a man of principle and determination and quality.

But let us for the sake of argument assume you come prepared to be an aggressive president, a soul brother to Derek Bok or Kingman Brewster or Father Hessburg. Then what course is laid out before you? It is plain that the University's physical plant needs little emendment; there are many new buildings on campus. Rather, it is at last time to turn toward more substantive goals. Academic departments must be upgraded. How? Only one way: by spending money to hire good, nay, outstanding professors; by spending more to give these professors the research support they demand, the same sort of research support they get as a matter of course at the better state universities and at all the major private universities.

I offer the example of the economics department, simply because it is the department I'm familiar with. Now it's a small department, fairly swallowed up by the larger and more vocationally oriented, less philosophically oriented business administration department. But yet the economics department has a nucleus of professors who do original work; whose papers regularly get published in the major economic journals; who have standing in the economics profession (in fact, the professor I'm associated with is this week lecturing at the London School of Economics and Cambridge University). Now it's safe to say that whatever distinction the economics department has achieved, it has achieved in spite of the university administration, whose impulse has been to steadily cut back, retreat, and contract its support in a most niggardly fashion. And of course, the biggest cutbacks are reserved for student support. Graduate assistantships have been drastically cut since I've been at the University. We have to borrow thousands of dollars to survive each summer.

> " ... You cannot imagine the very real stupidity, the backwardness of the majority of state legislators to whom you must answer. They comprise perhaps the most muleheaded, least competent deliberative body north of the Rio Grande ..."

Well of course there is the state legislature to thank. Anyone who's been connected with a state university is well acquainted with its Achille's Heel—the ubiquituous state legislature, anxious at every turn to politicize the state university under its domain. In South Carolina, the state legislature has done a particularly thorough job of politicizing the University Law School and the Medical University. But the state legislature would love to get its grubby hands on every department of the University. Half the legislature would clamor to turn the University into a high-school level vocational school. Such an institution would be highly congenial to the mentality of most legislators. And the other half of the legislators will demand that good taxpayers' money not be wasted on Communistic professors — that instead it all be poured into the sports program, so South Carolinians can be "proud" and have their state's name bandied about on the national airwaves. There does actually exist in the state a contingent which feels that the only proper way to get recognition for a school, and thus attract funds, is to buy for it a winning football or basketball team.

This is folly: the University is too small to compete with the large state universities. Besides that, its lack of academic reputation detracts from its sports program. Why should a top athlete select USC when he can go to, say, the University of Maryland or the University of Virginia and play on a good team, but also get a degree from a respectable school?

And if the state legislature doesn't turn the University into a trade school, and if it can't make it into a "sports" school, then the legislature, in its profound, insidious ignorance, will endeavor to strip the University down to the financial bone, in the miscreant name of "fiscal conservatism". You cannot imagine the very real stupidity, the backwardness of the majority of state legislators to whom you must answer. They comprise perhaps the most muleheaded, least competent deliberative body north of the Rio Grande. And you will be surprised to learn that the mainstream South Carolina press is every bit as stupid and vulpine in its panderings.

So, in the plain face of manifold hurdles, will you be the aggressive fighter for a better university? Or will you opt for the easier role of faceless corporate manager? If you're here to kiss ass, to prostrate yourself before the multitude of political interets yearning to meddle with the University, then you'll be cheating USC's students, its alumni, and the people of South Carolina. But if you're prepared to show some guts, to meet the state government headon, then you'll be welcomed by many inside the university system, and they will support you.

Please Fritz, not these two

James Stevens

The Congress is expected to create at least two — possibly three — new U. S. district judgeships in South Carolina before the end of the year, as part of a nationwide expansion of the federal judiciary. U. S. Senator Fritz Hollings, who will have a lot to say about who gets the posts, told The State's Washington correspondent Lee Bandy last week that lobbying for the posts among S. C. lawyers is already hot and heavy.

Former Columbia civil rights activist Matthew Perry, now a judge on the U. S. Military Court of Appeals, is considered a shoo-in for one of the seats on the bench. Perry has the support of both Hollings and Republican senator Strom Thurmond. But at least one other seat will be up for grabs, and Hollings says he has been "besieged" by letters and phone calls promoting various S. C. politicans.

Hollings said lobbying efforts have been particularly intense on behalf of two state politicians, U. S. Rep. James R. Mann of Greenville, and former state senator James Stevens of Horry County. Neither is likely to do much to enhance the reputation of the federal district court in South Carolina.

Political observers predict Mann will face stiff opposition if he chooses to run for reelection to the House of Representatives in 1978. Mann has experienced serious financial problems in recent years and has been the subject of investigative reports by the Charlotte Observer and the Washington Post. In February, The Post reported on Mann's relationship with a Greenville coin dealer who has been convicted of violation of postal regulations in connection with a mail order bicentennial coin business. The Post said Mann, who previously had loaned $30,000 to the dealer, used his Capitol staff and Congressional equipment and supplies to assist the dealer in his coin business.

Mann denied the charges — "I was just doing a favor for a constituent," he said — and announced he would personally request the House ethics committee to conduct an investigation. He never did.

Stevens, of course, was lately a powerhouse in the S. C. Senate — a member of the "old guard" that included Calhoun County senator Marion Gressette, Rembert Dennis of Berkeley, Sen. Ralph Gasque of Marion, Colleton senator J. P. "Preacher" Harrelson, and others. Prior to the passage of Home Rule these rural county senators were kingpins in their home counties; as heads of their respective legislative delegations, they directed county administrative policies. In the Senate they formed a Great Wall of seniority and successfully blocked many pieces of progressive legislation. Stevens, for example, has been given credit for almost single - handedly blocking the passage of meaningful tidelands legislation — which his coastal county supporters opposed — during the early 70s.

Stevens, Gasque and Harrelson were forced out of office in 1976 by reform - styled candidates running against the leviathan seniority system and ring politics. Stevens' reelection campaign was highly erratic, to say the least. During the Democratic primary Stevens punched out an opponent during a county stump meeting and was charged with assault. Stevens' most formidable opponent in the primary was former Little River postmaster Ralph Ellis, who ran an anti-Stevens campaign which attacked the seniority system and "politics - as - usual." Stevens, who used his seniority as a major plank in his campaign platform, ended up in a run-off with Ellis. In an incredible turn - around which left many political experts shaking their heads, Stevens announced during the runoff he was repudiating the seniority system and, if elected, he would fight to eliminate it. This late - hour desperation move was laughed down by voters seeking reform and cost Stevens votes among his traditional supporters who backed him because of his seniority. Stevens lost by a significant margin.

Despite the heavy lobbying in their behalf, Mann and Stevens are probably not leading contenders for the new judgeships. Hollings told Bandy that Stevens' supporters were arguing that "it's time for a Pee Dee judgeship," an idea which Bandy said Hollings "pooh-poohed ... noting there is no such thing in South Carolina as a Pee Dee or Piedmont judgeship. He pointed out there is one statewide district." While some heavy between - the - lines reading is required, Hollings' statement seems to suggest he's not all that enthusiastic about the Stevens' candidacy.

Several years ago, after much vacillation, Mann turned down a position on the U. S. Military Court of Appeals (which later went to Perry). And according to Bandy, he told a reporter a few months ago "he no longer was interested in any kind of federal

Best bet: Pug will run for the Senate

"... What is needed is a quest for excellence. A program for excellence is a starting point. We have the financial resources to realize its goals. Now we need the will and the leadership to pursue them. Then together we can restore the greatness that was South Carolina's when this nation began ..."
—Charles "Pug" Ravenel from his book, "Program for Excellence in South Carolina."

Osceola has it on good authority that Charles "Pug" Ravenel will announce later this month that he will seek the U. S. Senate seat now held by Republican Strom Thurmond.

Ravenel has been saying for some time that he would make a decision by the end of July on whether to take on Thurmond or try once more for the Governor's office. Word is that Ravenel considered several factors in coming to his decision, not the least of which was the money that would be available for the respective races. He is still nursing a sizeable campaign debt from his aborted 1974 race.

The news will be welcomed by other state Democrats interested in running for Governor, since Ravenel has been picked by most as an odds-on favorite to win should he seek the office. Former state senator Richard Riley of Greenville is sure to be delighted; Riley is reputed to be a close friend of Ravenel's and supposedly espouses about the same political philosophy.

With Ravenel out of the picture, of course, Riley's chances are greatly improved. And let's not forget Lt. Governor Brantley Harvey, who is considered by many to be the most formidable candidate in a no-Ravenel gubernatorial battle. Few observers give Riley much hope of beating Harvey, but with Pug out of it, his chances go from naught to slim. And that is why Riley has quietly been using his influence with the Carter administration and the Democratic National Committee (DNC) in Washington, trying to get them to urge Ravenel to go after Thurmond.

The Washington support for a Ravenel Senate race will mean money from the national party in a tough-money year, and persons close to the Riley campaign say Carter will campaign for Ravenel in the general election if he decides to run for Thurmond's seat. Riley, of course, is not the only reason Carter would support a Ravenel-for-Senate move. Ravenel's political stance would be attractive to Carter; more importantly, "Pug" is the only Demo hopeful who has a chance in '78 of unseating Thurmond, and Carter and the national party would like nothing better than to be rid of the old Republican hack.

Ravenel was in Washington last week and there is little doubt the options were laid out for him very thoroughly. It probably went something like this: "This is a tight money year. A year after a presidential election. A year where there are several state-wide offices up for grabs and a lot of candidates going after the same people for money. If you run for governor you're going to have to compete with at least two other people for the same money and you're going to have to raise money for both the primary and the general election, and that's talking about a lot of money and probably a huge debt when it's over — win or lose.

"On the other hand, if you run for senate you've got no primary oppostion, so you're only talking about one race. You've not only got money coming in from the DNC and support from the Carter administration, but you've also got the wholehearted support of the state party." Supposedly state party money - men Bob McNair and Don Fowler both endorse the Ravenel for Senate plan.

"Pug" Ravenel

Strom Thurmond

Of course, there are other factors Ravenel took into consideration in making his decision to run for the Senate. If he ran for governor, no other office would be available when his term expired in 1982. Thurmond would have two years left in his term, and Ravenel would probably not challenge Fritz Hollings, whose term expires in 1981. So Ravenel would fave a two-year layover in seeking an office he admittedly wants to capture at some point in the future — it might break the momentum.

Other factors said to be important in Ravenel's decision are: (1) many of the people who worked in his '74 campaign are now encouraging him to run for the Senate; (2) his own polls show he could beat Thurmond in next year's election; (3) Ravenel is said to believe Richard Riley is qualified to implement the "programs for excellence" that Ravenel preached in populist tones during the '74 election; and (4) Hollings would throw his support to Ravenel in a Senate race, as he would dearly love to lose the label "South Carolina's junior senator."

Riley and Harvey are not the only state Democrats who would wallow in satisfaction over a decision by Ravenel to run for Senate. Former congressman W. J. Bryan Dorn, Ravenel's nemesis in 1974, is said to be itching to run for something, preferably the governor's office. Rumor has it he would jump in a race with Riley and Harvey for the office but would think twice before gearing up for another run against Ravenel.

Unfortunately, Ravenel's decision to run for Senate instead of the governor's office appears to be based primarily on purely political ("pragmatic") factors. Whatever happened to the "program for excellence in South Carolina?" The problems addressed in Ravenel's 1974 campaign are still problems today. If anything, they are worse. It is difficult to believe Ravenel can affect these problems from Washington in the same manner he could deal with them in Columbia. And there are several problems with the rationalization that Dick Riley can carry the reform banner forward. For one thing, Riley is not a "fresh face;" he's served in the S. C. Senate and has strong ties with the traditional state party structure. While his record has been fairly progressive, many people have difficulty solving the equation "Pug Ravenel equals ..." with the answer 'Dick Riley." Ideals, if Ravenel truly has some, are not suitable for transfusion. And surely Riley is not going to be satisfied as a second-string substitute for the former Harvard jock who took S. C. by storm in 1974. He'll strike out on his own, never fear.

Ravenel has apparently fallen prey to the same things he stood against in 1974; i.e., politics over ideals. The same Democratic party forces that did him in back in 1974 would like nothing better than to see him run for Thurmond's seat. They win either way you look at it. If Ravenel wins, they're rid of Thurmond and "Pug" is way up in Washington. Better there than in the governor's office where he might get out of control. If Ravenel loses, then they're rid of Ravenel. He becomes South Carolina's latest Nick Zeigler.

There are still those who maintain Ravenel has really not decided, and that the governor's office option is still open. But the best bet is that given the pressures being brought to bear, the practical financial and political considerations tied to each race, Ravenel has decided on the U. S. Senate.

Other political speculation floating around as the campaigns for 1978 begin to gear up:

Lexington senator Tom Turnipseed makes no secret of his determination to seek a statewide office next year, either for attorney general or governor. Turnipseed says the Lt. Governor's spot is out, and he is "leaning" toward the governor's race. Should he fall in, he'll probably drown, but not before he makes a lot of trouble for the other Democratic candidates, particularly Riley who will desperately need the populist votes Turnipseed

Exorcist II: "Don't waste your money on this dud"

There is nothing of redeeming social, cinematic, or entertainment value in Exorcist II — The Heretic. Each of the three friends who saw the film with me agreed that it is the worst big-budget, major studio production we've ever seen, and between the four of us, we've seen some of the most awful films of the last ten years.

I went to see the movie because I had seen the trailers of several coming attractions, including The Heretic, while going to see Annie Hall. The Heretic appeared to be a funny, terrible movie and I didn't want to miss the opportunity to see Richard Burton in another priest role. I'm not sorry that I spent the time and money on the film but I cannot recommend it to anyone, with the possible exception of those movie fans who have unlimited income and lots of time to waste.

"... it is the worst big-budget, major studio production we've ever seen ..."

The movie is an absurd, unbelievable continuation of the story of the possession of Miss Teenage America (Linda Blair) by a spirit of evil, the demon Pazuzu, and the efforts of the forces of Good (the Roman Catholic Church) to save her soul. The story ceases to sustain itself about ten minutes into the film when the snickers from the audience burst into full - fledged laughter at the idiot dialogue and the contrived plot contortions. Supposedly, the Church has authorized another priest to investigate the death of Father Merrin, who suffered a fatal heart attack when he exorcised the demon possessing the body and soul of pre-teen Regan in Exorcist I. Regan, now abundantly pubescent, is under the care of a woman psychiatrist (played by Louise Fletcher, made up to look like Ellen Burstyn) at a clinic - hospital in Manhattan. She believes in science, the good Father believes in the struggle of GOOD vs. EVIL and nobody can believe that this movie is taking itself seriously. Bio-feedback, psychic powers, cliff-dwellers in northern Africa, huge swarms of locusts, and dime-store pseudo-theology are thrown together in a mud-pie of a plot that is not only unbelievable in terms of contents, but is so badly edited that one loses track of it almost immediately. The only possible healthly response is laughter, for the film is full of hilariously funny incidents pompously masquerading as plot developments.

"... Bio-feedback, psychic powers,cliff-dwellers in northern Africa, huge swarms of locusts, and dime-store pseudo-theology are thrown together in a mud-pie of a plot ..."

Louise Fletcher and Richard Burton both attempt to salvage the disaster with determined, workman-like performances but neither succeeds. Burton has played a cleric so often (Becket, Night of the Iguana, The Sandpiper) that he simply goes into automatic pilot, but here he seems unusually rigid and hysterical. Fletcher tries hard to bring some life to a character whose only justification is to replace Mommy, but she wisely gives up and goes along with the silliness.

Director John Boorman has had moderate success as a standard "popular film" director. His most successful film (commercially as well as critically) was Deliverance. One of his recent failures, which recalls Exorcist II, was the confused and overblown Zardoz. In The Heretic he seems to have forgotten everything he ever knew about movie-making; the editing and cinematography are as erratic and pointless as the script.

There is nothing remotely frightening about Exorcist II except the unmistakeable impression that we will be cursed with Exorcist III. So many strings are left dangling at the end of The Heretic that I thought the projectionist had forgotten to show the final reel. The movie simply stops instead of ending and no doubt we will see The Further Adventures of Pazuzu in 1978 or 79. In the meantime, don't waste your money on this dud.

Next week, what William Friedkin was doing while he wasn't making Exorcist II.

"Luv": Superb cast struggles with a mediocre script

Dave Wesner & Jim Thigpen in "Luv"

The Wade Hampton Dinner Theater people marched into their debut last weekend loaded for bear. Jim Thigpen, David and Barbara Wesner were the cast, Lou Kaplan the director. Collectively they form one of the finest and most experienced thespian ensembles Columbia has ever put forth. It was great to see their talents again. They pleased us immensely. But we should hope their next performances are in scripts whose qualities equal their own.

We like to compare this production to some of the Super Bowls, where the winner is a foregone conclusion weeks before the game is played; the only question is whether or not the game will offer much of interest. You remember them. While the Dallas Cowboys were methodically winning the world football crown, bored fans were napping. Same with Green Bay, and Miami their second year. Those teams boasted the best football talent in the world. When the time came, the players did their jobs. Then the television viewers, rising to kill the tube, sullenly realized they should have gone to visit grandma that afternoon, after all.

Of course the Luv cast performed excellently. They were given perfectly suitable roles. Unfortunately, here's all it added up to: A man falls out of love with his wife, palms her off on an old friend, falls in love with her again and steals her back. The whole plot unfolds on a New York bridge where the characters take turns threatening to jump off, and occasionally one of them does jump off — but they always have to reappear and prolong the nonsense.

Now, comedies have succeeded on the sheer hilarity of the situations upon which they are based, coupled with witty dialogue. Luv is far from the best of those, however. Primally, the situation isn't exactly comic, for aside from the contrived romantic intrigue, these characters are living decidedly meaningless lives; if it weren't for the bandying of choice quips — and there were some choice ones, we agree — this so-called comedy would be little more than a sick joke. And on the other hand, there is not sufficient humorous interplay to make it endure as sheer comedy. The only way author Murray Schisgal could have gotten away with it would have been to write it just unforgettably uproarious from beginning to end with not even time between laughs for the audience to breathe.

Luv isn't that funny. Consequently, rather than a pleasantly meaningful evening's diversion it turns out to be a non-productive distraction.

Producer Howard Winslow must be given credit for selecting a non-standard for the Wade Hampton's opening production. But in our view his choice was a poor one. Salvaged by excellent casting, Luv could have been an embarrassment in less capable hands.

Richland County's forgotten land

(Editor's note: Contributor Michael Collins is a former VISTA worker with an intimate knowledge of the problems of three small black communities situated in Richland County just south of Columbia near South Beltline Boulevard. Collins' VISTA work from August, 1975 to August, 1976 took him into the communities of Taylors, Little Camden, and Arthurtown where he worked with local residents to solve community problems.

This week, in the first of a two-part series, Collins recounts his experiences in the Taylors community during his VISTA service and what he found upon his return after a year's absence.)

by Michael Collins

"This is the forgotten land," sighed Mrs. Jackson, "everyone knows we're here but nobody will do anything for us." Mrs. Jackson lives on Bates Street in Little Camden and we were talking about the black communities of Taylors, Little Camden and Arthurtown which are located near the University of South Carolina's Williams - Brice Stadium.

As a VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) volunteer (August, 1975 — August, 1976) I lived in Taylors and worked with people from all three communities; we spent most of our time trying to affect the physical milieu of the area. When I returned to visit my former neighbors recently I found that little progress had been made. Conditions remained as they have been for decades.

The following is a report of the problems of these communities and their attempts — mainly unsuccessful — to stave off the disintegration of their neighborhoods.

TAYLORS

Taylors is the community I am most familiar with. From February, 1976 to August, 1976 I lived there with two other VISTA's in a five-room wooden house. The rent was $30 per month; we had water (only cold), a bathroom whose toilet went on the blink for weeks at a time, a wood-burning stove and more rats running through the walls and ceiling than I care to remember.

Taylors derived its name from William Taylor, a plantation owner, who gave plots of land to the different families who had worked for him. Years ago Taylors was a bustling town; people from 'down the country' would come to stay there and get work at the Southern railroad yard or at the mills and plants in the area.

Today Taylors is a small community of about 80 homes which are located along Andres Road. Most of these homes can be found along the narrow dirt alleys which run toward the railroad yard. The community is ringed by industry: the Southern railroad yard is behind and the sound of railroad cars hooking and unhooking reverberates through the community at night; a sprawling pipe company stands in front; a cement plant lies to the North where Andrews meets Assembly Street, and the Columbia Steel and Metal Co. (a junkyard) is on the southern end.

The community has some glaring problems. Foremost is the 'party water line'. Taylors is located just outside the city limits so there is no city water line running down Andrews Road. In the early 1950's a group of homeowners pooled their money to run a water line the quarter-mile distance from Shop Road, which runs parallel to Andrews Road and has a city main running down it, to Andrews Road; then each of the homeowners tapped into the water line. Other families followed suit and along Andrews Road there are usually from six to twenty families using a single water meter.

The method of paying the bill is simple: the total bill is divided by the number of houses hooked onto the line. It makes no difference how many people there are in a home; on our line at the southern end of Andrews a family of six paid the same amount as an 84-year old woman with no bathroom in her home. This was how it had always worked. There were also people who would move into the area for a while and leave without paying their bill. The other people on the line had to make up the difference or everybody's water would be cut off.

Taylors street

Besides the obvious inequities, the southern end of Andrews Road received bills which averaged $4 or more higher per home than elsewhere along Andrews. Somehow we were losing water but nobody knew where or how.

Another problem in the community was our neighbor to the south — the junkyard.

"I just don't think it's fair the way they put it right in the Black people's mouth," was the way one woman put it. It hardly connotes the loathing which most residents feel.

The Columbia Steel and Metal Co. moved into the neighborhood several years ago and has been extremely callous in its dealings with local residents. From its front on Shop Rd. one can barely tell it is a junkyard but its rear protrudes onto Andrews Road and the fence surrounding it seems barely able to prevent its merchandise from spilling forth into Taylors.

At the southern end of Taylors, Andrews Road curves around the junkyard and continues running south. Swift's Row is located just around the curve; it consists of five houses (there used to be ten) which used to be company houses for men working at the Swift Oil Mill. Swift's Row is literally surrounded by the junkyard; it is behind them on both sides of the row of houses. Mrs. Cora Lee Goodwin's home is on the end of the row and the fence separating her house from the junkyard is about ten feet away. Last year Columbia Steel and Metal had a pile of crushed cars right up against that fence.

"They was way over my roof," Mrs. Goodwin says "and piled so that you could hardly get a breath of fresh air." At the time Mrs. Goodwin was deathly afraid they would topple over on her home.

The owners of the junkyard also asked the residents of Swift's Row to move their water line. The line runs diagnally across the junkyard to their homes. Years ago when Swift owned the land they had been given permission to run the line across the property. The new owners could not put up with the inconvenience of having the pipe burst anywhere on its property; they wanted it moved. The residents of Swift's Row simply do not have the money to construct a new line around the junkyard.

The last major complaint vis-a-vis the junkyard was the enormous proliferation of rats since its establishment.

"Now we used to have rats but they were never so bad until that place moved in." Mrs. Davis is a small rotund woman with plenty of energy and a large family. The Davis family lives in a trailer which sits about forty feet from the junkyard.

While we sit in the green metal lawn chairs outside her trailer Mrs. Davis points at the junkyard's fence across the road. "I can hear them over there going under the fence and through those bushes. And at night you can hear them at work under the trailer. Just scratching and scratching."

Rats are a constant problem. During my stay in the neighborhood, we killed one with a trap and poisoned at least two — I say two because we found them in the house. There were others which, after nibbling on some poison, would go tearing through the ceiling and finally outside. Believe me nothing can ruin a fitful sleep more thoroughly than a poison-crazed rat scratching and clawing through the wallboards and ceiling in the dead of night.

In April, 1975 a small group of residents formed a club which they called the Taylors Cmmunity Rights Organization (TCRO). Their aim was to improve the neighborhood. In May they sponsored a week-long community clean-up. It was a beginning.

The TCRO also tackled the problems of rats and the crushed autos which hung over Mrs. Goodwin's head like an Angel of Death. A complaint was registered with the Health Department which, in turn, talked to the owners of the junkyard. The Health Department reported that the owners were cooperative; no signs of rats were found and the owners promised to move the stacked cars. The cars remained in their lethal position and were removed a few weeks later after Mrs. Goodwin continued to complain.

Mrs. Connie Davis, a member of the TCRO, requested the city engineer's office to study the possibility of running a city water main down Andrews Road, so that people could get individual meters. The results of the study were not encouraging. According to the engineers the best way to run the main would be to bore under the railroad and that could cost anywhere from $20,000 to $50,000. The cost would be divided up among the homeowners-who would also have to pay the cost of laying the 6" pipe from Shop Road to Andrews Road. at $10-$15 a foot. It was an economic impossibility.

During July, 1976 the club sent a petition to Commissioner Paul Cobb of the State Highway Department requesting that the portion of Andrews Road which runs behind the junkyard and the highway department and connects with Barlow Road be paved; they also requested that the department do something about the lack of drainage along Andrews Road. The Commissioner acknowledged receipt of the letter and indicated that he would advise Maintenance Engineer MacRaney Fulmer to investigate the matter. He would let the TCRO know of the report and recommendations he received. A year later nothing has happened.

A second letter concerning the drainage was sent to Richland County representative George Wilson asking him to represent the community's interests vis-a-vis the State Highway Department. Wilson never replied.

During the months of July and August 1975, a new messiah appeared on Taylor's horizon: annexation to the city of Columbia. Annexation would mean city water, city sewerage service, sanitation service, better lighting, lower fire insurance rates and better police protection.

In October Taylors was part of the South Beltline - B luff Roads area which voted against annexation. Many residents were confused about the costs and benefits of becoming a part of the city. The cause of the confusion was clear: a number of the many businesses in the area formed an anti-annexation group — "The Better Way Group" — which flooded the area with leaflets warning of high tax increases and waiting periods of up to several years for services. The Better Way Group officially promulgated city - county consolidation in lieu of annexation, but in fact it was nothing more than a front for business interests which wanted to avoid city taxes and couldn't care less about the services the area received. Annexation was defeated, the Better Way Group disappeared, and a resident of the proposed annexation area wisely observed, "You can't fight big money."

During the summer months we would troop into the sweltering halls of Second Union Baptist Church on Andrews Road to discuss the possibilities and consequences of annexation. We knew that taxes would rise but we also knew that water and sewerage services would be an important step toward upgrading the quality of life in the community.

Attorney Allan Holmes of Columbia Legal Aid assured us that the South Carolina annexation law was unconstitutional because of the freeholder ballot box which permitted property owners to veto any proposed annexation. At the end of August the club asked Legal Aid to file suit against the S. C. annexation law. That suit was eventually filed and the law declared unconstitutional — but in Charleston. On June 15, 1977 U. S. District Judge Robert Hemphill ruled that property owners deserved no special considerations in an annexation election. By this time the TCRO was no longer meeting.

In February and March of 1977 I visited Taylors. They were not pleasant visits. The freezing weather of winter does not fall upon all equally: the poor, especially the elderly poor, are the most vulnerable prey. People who live in small shell homes with no insulation must keep wood and coal fires burning as long as they can afford to, but at some time, usually late at night, the fire will go out and the freezing weather will become a part of their home until the early morning fire is set.

> "... Rosa Ross Goodwin is a welfare recipient, although she probably does not know it. She has been working all her life ..."

Rosa Ross Goodwin is 84 years old. She lives in a small three room house which does not have a bathroom; it has only cold water in the kitchen, and a Fatso wood-burner in the living room serves as her stove and heater. Mrs. Goodwin will proudly tell you that she has been working since she was nine years old — "farm work, hotel and laundry work and houskeepin'" — she has literally worked more jobs than she can remember in her lifetime. When Mrs. Goodwin retired at the age of 62 she would leave home at 5 a.m. to get to her job at a boarding house and return at 9 p.m. After she retired she moved to the country where she was able to farm and take care of herself until she was 81. Three years ago Mrs. Goodwin moved to Taylors so that she would have neighbors close by to help her out.

Rosa Ross Goodwin is a welfare recipient, although she probably does not know it. She has been working all her life, and she receives a monthly social security check, but it is deemed inadequate by the federal government so, under the Supplemental Security Income program which covers the disabled, the blind and persons over 65, Mrs. Goodwin's income is supplemented until it is brought up to $187.80 per month. When people speak derisively of the welfare give-away programs, I usually think of Rosa Ross Goodwin.

Because of the brutal winter Mrs. Goodwin hardly moved from her bed during the winter months. When I visited her recently she complained of an aching back and severe stiffness; she hurts so much when she moves that she prefers to just lie in her bed. At mid-day she receives a lunch courtesy of the meals-on-wheels program. A neighbor prepares her other meals.

On April 1, another indignity was added to Mrs. Goodwin's life by the city of Columbia: her water was turned off. Mrs. Goodwin's house is on the southern end of Andrews Road and is served by a meter on Shop Road. The bills had been abnormally high, and they had gone unpaid, so the meter was removed. There were 14 families on the line; there were five adults over the age of 70 (one had just recently recovered from a stroke) and seventeen children including a two month old baby.

In January the water bill was $19.65 per home and in February it was $31.92.

The high January bill was probably caused by a pipe breaking in an unoccupied house. In February the pipe which runs across the junkyard and serves Swift's Row was broken. Mr. Sidenberg, the junkyard's owner, would not let anybody on his property to fit it; he told Mrs. Cora Lee Goodwin he would fix it. Swift's Row went without water for about two weeks and Easter Nathan told me, "I could see they put that pipe up on a rock and the water was just spillin' out, but we couldn't do nothin' about it."

The residents of Andrews Road had their water turned back on when County Councilman Billy Taylor came down on April 5th to see what the problem was. Taylor collected what money he could from the residents and delivered it to city hall; he also informed the city of the 'party water meter' situation in Taylors. On May 26, the water was turned off again. Billy Taylor had it back on by the following night.

Taylors may get a water line by the middle of August. Although the city engineers knew of the Taylors situation the city manager, Mr. Graydon V. Olive, did not and he has promised the city will run a water line down Andrews Road. But as I have pointed out, most of the homes in Taylors are located down the small alleys off Andrews Road. If the city does not run the water line down the alleys most small homeowners will find it impossible to hook onto the line and, once again, things will remain at a standstill in this small community.

In next week's conclusion, Michael Collins revisits the black communities of Little Camden and Arthurtown, then presents an overview of the struggles of these communities to establish themselves in the face of county and city indifference.

judgeship." But this situation could change — Mann is in trouble in his district following the reports of his shaky business affairs, and at least one formidable candidate is expected to oppose him in 1978 — Republican state senator Carroll Campbell of Greenville. Mann could decide to step down and take a judgeship to avoid a volatile and expensive reelection battle — assuming Hollings and others are willing to support him in light of his well - publicized business problems. And Mann would have to undergo a thorough pre-appointment investigation; perhaps he would prefer not to.

Hollings mentioned other possible candidates during the Bandy interview; among them were Rep. Jean Toal of Richland County, former U. S. senatorial candidate Nick Zeigler of Florence, 1978 gubernatorial hopeful Richard Riley of Greenville, and Richland County Sen. Heyward McDonald.

Make what you will of these. All four have more or less "progressive" images and have not been subjected to any really damaging publicity. We could do worse. But they are all politicans and, as a past president of the state bar told an Osceola reporter not long ago, many of the men and women most qualified to become judges won't get near electoral politics. They are more scholarly, more reflective, less drawn to power and its attendant abuses. They are in fact the stuff of which judges should be made.

Certainly Mann and Stevens are not.

Rumors

might be expected to draw.

Richland state senator Alex Sanders is said to be seriously interested in another run for Lt. Governor. He was defeated in a three-way race in 1974. It was earlier rumored Sanders was considering a run against Second District Congressman Floyd Spence, who many Democrats feel is ripe for picking. Since Spence's mediocre race against a ghost candidate last fall, virtually every viable Democratic candidate in the District (and some not so viable) has been rumored to be "looking into' the race.

For a time earlier this year most observers appeared convinced Richland Rep. Jean Toal would join in the first serious campaign by women for the post of lt. governor. She and Charleston Rep. Nancy Stevenson were most often mentioned. Now the talk is Toal will decide not to enter that race. Two reasons are being offered: first, Toal is not interested in running against Sanders, who is a political ally of sorts. Secondly, some observers believe Toal is unsure of her chances against Stevenson; with at least two women in the race, that novelty would be lost to both candidates, and Stevenson's political image would be softer, more moderate, more "Southern" — perhaps more attractive to South Carolina voters. Stevenson appears to be serious about her candidacy; state Democratic party executive director Martha Marr recently resigned her party post to run Stevenson's campaign.

Casse Culver

Highlight

Singer-songwriter Casse Culver will present an evening of women's music with bassist Barbara Cobb on Friday, July 15th, at the Columbia YWCA on 1505 Blanding Street, 8:30 p.m. Culver, a "Maryland Cowgirl" with a clear, strong voice and a country-folk style, uses the guitar, harmonica, piano, and autoharp in her performances. A donation of $3 will be payable at the door and free childcare will be available. For more information, call Liz Snow at 799-4197 or 771-4370.

Specials

"Late Night" entertainment at the Basil Pot Restaurant on Rosewood Drive this Saturday night will feature Woody Dennis and Percival Everett performing contemporary original jazz instrumentals with an Indian flair. The show begins at 9:30 p.m. and lasts until midnight and there will be an admission charge of 75 cents.

The Carolina Coliseum will host several concerts during the month of July, including Ted Nugent on July 17th and the Doobie Brothers on July 29th. Both of these shows will begin at 8 p.m. at the Coliseum and tickets are now on sale at the Coliseum and other usual ticket outlets. Ticket prices for both shows will be $7, $6 and $5. For more information call the Coliseum box office.

The Columbia Museum of Art will host exhibits of new photography by local talent during the month of July. Featured for the "Special Summer Exhibit" will be the works of Tom Campbell, Robert Glover, Terry Parke and Bob Rowan. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday thru Saturday and 2 p.m. thru 6 p.m. on Sundays. The museum is closed on Mondays. Admission to the exhibits is free.
